Police interfere but £361 raised

Students starve for Biafra

By the News Team

LAST weekend’s hunger strike in the Longmarket raised £361 towards relieving the famine in Biafra.

The money was raised in a fund set up by the University of Kent students’ council on students asking Canterbury shoppers to support Biafra. The Fund has been established, and have been boosted by the police who, after threatening, have now made no further comments.

The police have provided a man at the front desk who will be on the watch for any incidents of the kind that have occurred in the past.

Meanwhile, the students continue their strike, and the police have been asked to provide the necessary protection.

"Famine"

On Saturday afternoon, the police came to the Longmarket to find the students still on strike. They were asked not to leave the area, and were told that they would be removed if they continued.

The students have been warned that they will be removed if they continue their strike. The police have been asked to provide the necessary protection.

"Peace guerilla"

BATTHI KUMAR, author of the book "Repression or Non-Resistance," may be coming to meet students and to speak at the University.

After fair warning, the students have decided to continue their strike. They are looking for protection from the police, who have been asked to provide the necessary protection.

Vile’s big plan for discussion

LAST WEDNESDAY, Senate ratified the appointment of Professor Maurice Vile as the new Dean of the Social Science Faculty.

Professor Vile believes that if young people are to be interested in discussion of the Faculty’s problems, they must be involved in the process of discussion by the Faculty. He said that the present Faculty was too large for any discussion, and that the new Faculty would be smaller, and would allow for more discussion.

He also believes that the Faculty should be more democratic, and that the students should be more involved in the process of decision making.

In his opening remarks, Professor Vile praised the work of the Social Science Faculty, and said that it was important for the Faculty to continue to develop and grow.

He also thanked the Senate for its support, and said that he looked forward to working with the new faculty to make the Social Science Faculty a more dynamic and innovative institution.

Petition asks for Humanities change

By Margaret Hollman

THERE may be an extensive revision of the Humanities Part I course in the next few weeks. This was already being discussed when a student petition was presented to the Faculty this week, asking for student opinion to be considered first.

As a result, a meeting of the Humanities Part I committee was called, and there were discussions about the future of the course. The students in question are in their final year of university and they are concerned about the future of the course.

In the meantime, Professor Hollman is setting up a committee to look at the situation and present recommendations to the Senate.

 Lodgings representation improved

The student union has appointed a committee to look at the problem of lodgings.

There have been complaints about the quality of lodgings in the past, and the committee is set up to look into the matter. The committee will be chaired by Professor Hollman, and it will be made up of representatives from the student union and the university authorities.

Guidance

This week saw a number of new appointments to the guidance department.

The department is expanding, and more staff is being recruited.

The services of the guidance department are available to all students, and they are encouraged to use them.

The department is also working on a new publication, which will be available soon.

The new appointments are as follows:

- Miss Smith, who has joined the guidance department as a new assistant.
- Miss Brown, who has been appointed as a new counselor.

The department is looking forward to serving the students better in the future.

Students banned by newsagents

By Paul Cardew

PETER WATFORD, a third year student, has just experienced the literal definition of the word “banned.” He was behind in paying his bill half a pound, and when the newsagents, J. H. Wood, learned of his account, he said, “Peter, you pay the bill. The newsagent then refused to accept his account.

All change for dinner?

SOMETHING HAS to be done about the menu in the student union bar. It is incredibly uninteresting and the students are not satisfied with it. This is being discussed by the student union, and it is hoped that changes will be made soon.

In the meantime, the students are encouraged to suggest ideas for new dishes.

‘Trade Game’

A Rkseslution carried

The resolution was carried by a vote of 25 to 25, with all parties voting. The resolution stated that the government should not interfere in the affairs of the student union.

The resolution was supported by the student union, who said that it was important to have a say in the affairs of the university.

The resolution was opposed by the university authorities, who said that it was important to have a say in the affairs of the university.

Bar thefts increase

An incident in the presence of drunkards near the University has resulted in the theft of several thousand dollars worth of liquor from the campus bar. The incident occurred on Friday afternoon, when the bar was being used by members of the University as a place of gathering. The theft, which was estimated to be valued at $20,000, was reported to the police. The police are investigating the incident and have asked for any information that may assist in locating the thieves.

Do interviews ensure that candidates get a fair deal?

INTERVIEWS — The Big Ordeal

SHOULD the UK studenthood be a collection of interesting eccentricities or a streamlined progress from glory to glory between "A levels and executive job?" Scrutinizers and interviewers may have opposite views, though they set out to be as flexible as possible on "Wait and see" basis.

Dr. D. H. Taylor of the University of Kent says that "employability" is the best criterion of how students would make worthy candidates, whether for industry or the university faculty. Some employers will not employ students unless they have been interviewed by the students' union committee. The only objection to such an interview is that it is too informal.

However, the question of what constitutes a "good" interview is no longer a settled matter. In the past, "good" interviewees have been those who have been interviewed by the students' union committee. However, in recent years, "good" interviewees have been those who have been interviewed by the students' union committee.

Working class

Some students would like to see a greater proportion of students from working class backgrounds, but it is not easy to achieve this goal. The main reason is that a student who comes from a working class background is likely to find it difficult to compete with students from more privileged backgrounds.

By NICKY TAYLOR

too many subjects to be more inventive towards them. Few students from working class homes apply for postgraduate courses, and the university has been encouraged to provide more opportunities for such students.

Another interview is a long way to go. Applicants are still faced with the problem of how to attract candidates from outside. The university has been working on this problem for some time, and has been successful in attracting candidates from outside.

Whatever interviews are looking for, they may have to cope with the problem of selecting the right candidates. They may have to cope with the problem of selecting the right candidates. Whether the university is successful in attracting candidates from outside is still to be seen.

Aptitude tests

The method of selecting candidates varies in the three faculties. The Humanities faculty is the most demanding, with a high entrance standard and an emphasis on breadth and general knowledge. The science faculty is the least demanding, with a lower entrance standard and an emphasis on specialisation. The engineering faculty is intermediate, with a moderate entrance standard and an emphasis on practical skills.

The interviews are the main entry method. They are held at the university, and are designed to assess the candidate's potential for success in the course.

Rudimentary assignment

Mr. Richard Langmore, the new chairman of the University of Kent, says that the university is making a deliberate attempt to attract candidates from outside. He added: "We are finding that the students who come from outside the university are more willing to accept the challenges of the course. It is important that the university should attract candidates from outside, and that it should provide them with the necessary support to succeed."

Adequate selection

The number of applications for places at the university is increasing, and the university is finding it increasingly difficult to select the best candidates. The university is therefore considering increasing the number of places available, and is also considering changing the selection process. The university is also considering increasing the number of places available, and is also considering changing the selection process.

A Chancellor: Wanted now!

This summer’s degree congregation draws nearer and we are still no nearer to ‘a Chancellor’ for the University of Kent. (It is now seven months since Princess Marina’s death.)

The main job of the Chancellor is to confer degrees to graduates of the University. In the event of there being no Chancellor, or the Chancellor being unavailable, the charge of the University lies down that it is up to the Vice-Chancellor to officiate at the Degree Ceremony.

There are several reasons why the eventuality of Dr. Geoffrey Templeman giving away degrees this summer is so regrettable. Imagine a real chancellor doing the job.

A degree ceremony is a spectacular occasion. How many students receiving degrees come long distances to see their children take part in the glittering raiment; most people enjoy being part of a festive social occasion like this, even if they are not particularly religious and trivial it may in fact be. The more well-known and respected the person who hands them out, the better it will look, the better it is being for the students, the better it is for the University, the better it is for the world, and the better it is for society. Unfortunately, the students may be sitting in the presence of their own parents, who may be more well-known and respected than the Chancellor.

The implications don’t stop there. The Chancellor is supposed to be more than the sum of his degrees, in fact the Chancellor is supposed to have an influence on students in the wider sense. It is not enough to look at the job in terms of what it does for the students, but to consider how the job influences the students. The job is a very large position and it’s not possible to give a degree ceremony.

It does not go to reinforce the idea that we are to reinforce the idea that we are an educated society, that we are not only an educated society, but that we are an educated society. The implication is that we are an educated society. The implication is that we are an educated society. The implication is that we are an educated society.

Indeed, if the Chancellor is not to be present, then the degree is of little value, if the Chancellor is not to be present, then the degree is of little value, if the Chancellor is not to be present, then the degree is of little value.

Incant suggests that in order to facilitate a quick selection of a Chancellor, the Students’ Union should offer an immediate concession to the University Authorities, who obviously favour the old method of finding a Chancellor through Senate, Council and Court.

The Union should offer to have an immediate election, directly elected student representatives joining with representatives of the academic staff in order to find a suitable chancellor. The present members of the Council, who are sitting on the Committee “to find an appropriate method of selection” should also sit on this recognition committee. It is not reasonable for the Union to have a vote since they do not represent members of the University.

By making this concession, the Union would demonstrate its conviction that the Chancellor is necessary, because the Chancellor would be the main source of an open election. Incant suggests that the University has already stated the need for an open election. The Union should follow the lead of the body that is in charge of the election.

Liberal Academics

Liberal academics are often considered to be part of the liberal movement and are associated with democratic principles, including freedom of speech and the press. They are known for their opposition to censorship and their support of academic freedom. Liberal academics often argue that universities should be places where students can learn and grow in a free and open environment, without fear of censorship or political interference. They believe that universities should be places where different ideas and perspectives are encouraged and debated, in order to promote intellectual growth and critical thinking.

Conflicting aims

Conflicting aims arise when the goals of an academic institution conflict with the goals of its students, faculty, or other stakeholders. These conflicts can arise for a variety of reasons, including differences in priorities, values, or resources. Conflicts can also arise when the university has to make decisions that affect both students and faculty. For example, a university might need to cut budgets or reduce course offerings in order to save money, which could negatively impact both students and faculty.

The liberal education movement

The liberal education movement is a philosophy of education that emphasizes critical thinking, ethical reasoning, and personal development. It is based on the idea that education should go beyond the acquisition of knowledge, and should also provide opportunities for students to develop and reflect on their values, beliefs, and identities. Liberal education scholars argue that education is not just about gaining knowledge, but about developing the skills and values needed to be engaged and effective citizens.

In this context, the importance of academic freedom and the protection of intellectual freedom cannot be overstated. The role of the University in fostering a culture of open and diverse ideas is crucial for the advancement of knowledge and the promotion of democratic values.

A statement on Art

I REGARD painting as a means of expression of the inner life, a means of communication. Painters always have to look within themselves, to the heart of things, matching it with a trade, but a way of meditation. It is not only important what is revealed on the canvas, it is important what is revealed within. Often the more complex and difficult the problem, the more powerful the result. That which is revealed with the most effort to our own perception and renders it impossible for us to see is that which penetrates most deeply. That which is revealed in an easy way is not very revealing.

The past we often choose to avoid too much with the sunlight, the objective, the absolute. It is too easy to be deceived. Life for an artist must be the challenge to overcome it without considering the result. In the age of mechanization, critics are astonis...
Alertness essential in Fencing
By Rob Saper

"CHESS at high speed with no check mate," is how fencing has been described. However, anyone member of U.K.C. fencing club will soon point out that this description takes no account of the tremendous amount of physical exertion involved in the sport.

According to Rob Lord, one of the leading members, anyone who has tried fencing need confirm that it demands a lot of strength and speed and is quite a different experience from chess. Two main factors are crucial in fencing — the speed and speed of each of the opponents, and the opponent's acceleration.

Individually

In an endeavour to attain excellence, U.K.C. fencing club meets once a week for an afternoon of training. The main objective is to prepare members for the national championships and to improve performance in the individual event.

Individualists

In an individual event, each of the members of the club, Mr. John Doe, is paired with another member, Mr. John Smith, for the purpose of improving their own performance.

THE LOOK OF KENT IN THE FUTURE

A report by the Projects Department

INCANT INQUIRY

TO anyone observing the wide-open spaces of the university campus at present, it seems inconceivable that the intention is, and always has been, to fill in these "gaps" between the main buildings and construct a dense "city" in the way that is shown in our photograph.

It may indeed seem unpleasant to come to realise that the realistic scale which gave focus to its present aspect may in future be reduced to an urban, "Friendly" one, but the Consultant Architect, Mr. Henderson, argues that he does not consider that the larger buildings can enjoy real dignity until they are balanced by smaller ones around them.

As can be seen then, the idea for the first six or seven years is in many ways to complete the main buildings as far as is practicable, to produce an internal pattern of streets, buildings, which could be used as sources to the college. On the other hand, a teaching and administrative purposed scheme suggests that the buildings would be more aesthetically and physically attractive if there were smaller buildings.
